CHARTER DAY

The College is gradually adding to its memorials. Last year on Charter Day the striking statue of General Webb was unveiled; this year on the same occasion there was dedicated in the Great Hall a bronze tablet to commemorate Arthur Vincent Hegney, the first student of the institution to fall on the field of battle. This tablet, which may be regarded as a precursor of more elaborate future testimonials in honor of our soldiers in the present world conflict, is inserted in the wall of the Great Hall to the left of the platform and forms a companion piece to the one on the corresponding wall to the right, which bears the name of Edward M. Shepard. Thus are brought into intimate relationship a distinguished leader in the days of peace, who gave a lifetime to civic duties, and a humble private soldier in days of war, who gave up his youthful life in the service of his country.

The ceremony, which took place at noon on May 7, was begun with an academic procession preceded by the flags. President Mezes presided and Professor Baldwin assisted at the organ. The hall was well filled with students and guests. The addresses, so far as obtainable, follow:

REV. DR. CHARLES P. FAGNANI, PRESIDENT OF THE ALUMNI ASSOCIATION

We are assembled here today for two reasons: First to celebrate the Charter Day of the College of the City of New York, and, secondly, because two months ago today a young man died a violent death.

What mean those four vacancies in the glorious company of University banners hanging above our heads? The recent removal of their former occupants is explained by the appearance of that other banner with its many stars which holds the place of honor in the vaulted ceiling of this Great Hall. Our abhorrence of all things German has caused the taking down of the banners of the four German universities as unfit for association with their former sisters of France and England and Scotland and Italy. And one of the stars on that service banner is to be turned from blue to gold because Arthur Vincent Hegney of Townsend Harris Hall, Class of 1915, was killed by the Germans on March the seventh last.[1]

We are gathered here to honor the memory of the first of the students of our Alma Mater to lay down his life in this World-War for human emancipation, the first of a great company who will gladly make the supreme sacrifice before the final and complete victory is achieved.

It is reported that in a German newspaper there was an article about some American prisoners recently taken who, it is declared, seemed to know nothing about what they were fighting for and were without any zeal for the war. This, of course, is a calumny. Arthur Vincent Hegney knew and the millions of his comrades that are and are yet to be, know well what they are fighting for and will fight for until they win, and this knowledge can be expressed in seven great words whose initial letters spell the supreme word which comprehends them all. The first is Life; the World is fighting for its life,—life which is threatened by the death-dealing German attack upon humanity, life which would not be worth living by proud-spirited human beings in a world enslaved under Teutonic Imperialism. The second word is Independence, the right of a nation, no matter how small, to control its own affairs, and Interdependence without which Independence is anarchic and insecure. The third is Brotherhood, the recognition of human worth, of human personal independence as a means to fraternal interdependence and co-operation. The fourth is Equality, the equality of brothers, to be cherished and protected by the combined power of all, so that none shall be the helpless tool of another's selfish and tyrannical ends.

The fifth of the goodly company is Righteousness, which is justice, and fairness and the square deal, righteousness that alone exalteth a nation and establishes human relations on an enduring foundation. Next to the last is Truth, before which all deceit and double dealing, all lying, fraud and overreaching slink away to unending doom, without which there can be no security in our dealings with our fellows, Truth, which makes a scrap of paper as formidable as an army with banners.

And the last word is Youth. This is a war to make the world safe and happy for little children, where they will run no risk of being spitted on bayonets, of being deported away from ruined homes into distant lands, of starvation and brutality and outrage, Youth which should be happy and carefree, cradled in love and nourished in well being, Youth which is the hope of the world.

These seven great words—Life, Independence, Brotherhood, Equality, Righteousness, Truth and Youth—describe the things Arthur Vincent Hegney laid down his life for, the ideals on behalf of which the embattled hosts of the free peoples of the earth are confronting the cohorts of the enemies of mankind, and these seven words spell Liberty, Man's birthright from the hands of his Creator, without which he is worse off than the beasts that perish, for they are not aware of their subservience.

The famous 11th chapter of the Epistle to the Hebrews describes the procession of the heroes of faith, the martyrs for Liberty, the glorious host of the emancipators of mankind. The catalogue is not complete and finished in this Biblical record. Throughout the centuries since, there have been added to it the names of those, great and small, who have gladly, heroically, died that their fellows might live and be free. Arthur Vincent Hegney has gone to join that famous company. Our Alma Mater is proud of its sons, some of them because of the lives they lived and are living today, others because of the death they died. To the undying spirit of Arthur Vincent Hegney we cry All Hail! and pray that we, like him, may be found faithful unto death.

LEWIS F. MOTT, SENIOR PROFESSOR

In the last chant of his monodrama, Maud, Tennyson, you will remember, represents a young man rousing himself from lethargy to action, from discontent to enthusiasm under the stress of a great emergency, under the inspiration of a cause that he "felt to be pure and true." This young man, much given in his ordinary hours to lyrical whining about the materialism of the age and its thirst for gold, had been overwhelmed by his private miseries and crushed by his personal tragedy. From the black depths of his despair, he is recalled to life and energy by the thought > "That a war would arise in defense of the right,

> That an iron Tyranny now should bend or cease,
> The glory of manhood stand on his ancient height."

The change is instant and complete. Self sinks to its rightful paltry proportions in the scale of human values. "Hail," he sings,

> "Hail once more to the banner of battle unroll'd!
> Tho' many a light shall darken, and many shall weep
> For those that are crush'd in the clash of jarring claims,
> Yet God's just wrath shall be wreak'd on a giant liar;
> And many a darkness into the light shall leap,
> And shine in the sudden making of splendid names,
> And noble thought be freër under the sun,
> And the heart of a people beat with one desire."

The youth of this land, the youth of this college have proved that they too "have hearts in a cause," that they too "have awaken'd to the better mind." We have seen our soldiers march forth, and we shall see many more march forth to drudging labor and to desperate battle; and in dedicating this tablet in memory of the first who has fallen, Alma Mater blesses every one of her sons who shall endeavor to "shine in the sudden making of splendid names." Whether these splendid names win the plaudits of vociferous crowds or hide themselves in a no less glorious obscurity, whether they are engraved on monumental bronze or only in a single stricken heart, they are alike flames in the radiance of this Daughter of the Empire City. Our college claims them all, absorbs them all into her actual self, into her imperishable essence. The common day cannot be common when we contemplate these champions of justice for the world. The heart is lifted to higher levels; self-interest grovels before a deathless idea. These are the present-day slayers of dragons, prefigured in myth and legend and poetry. As our most ancient English epic tells, the hideous viper vomits fire and poison, but his end is sure. Though the hero Beowulf must die, he has saved his people from the beast. In such a triumph, who would commiserate the dead? No; it is the abject among the living who excite pity, a pity born of contempt for their infamy. Ashes that the flame has visited are purified, but the chilling, quenching slime is the unhallowed haunt of blind and obscene crawling things.

"Non ragioniam di lor, ma guarda e passa."

One instant of generous ardor outweighs a lifetime of monotonous mediocrity. The dead we do not bewail. Even the maimed, so noble is this cause, may carry steadfast in their souls a rich fund of joy.

These are indeed days of trial, but by no means days of sorrow. It is good to be young, for he who is now young can look back without envy upon those men of the past whose good fortune flung them into the crises of history and whose victories have opened the path of freedom to humanity. He can truly be content, he can even exult, that a vast and threatening encumbrance still remains to obstruct the road. His heart can cry out with glad confidence, "Thank God! this task was left for me!"

May those who in future days shall view this tablet, in days of calmer and less arduous duties, and of peaceful and homely, yet necessary achievement, feel the breath of that spirit which this bronze is intended to symbolize and to perpetuate:

"It is better to fight for the good than to rail at the ill;
I have felt with my native land, I am one with my kind,
I embrace the purpose of God, and the doom assign'd."

Charles E. Lydecker, '71, spoke for the Board of Trustees. He wished that all the students might be soldiers and receive the training of soldiers, this training being good physically, morally and intellectually. The soldier is a healthy man, for he takes proper exercise and he carries himself well. He learns team-work and prompt obedience to orders, seeing the importance of working with others as a unit under the command of a leader. Above all he must be intellectually alert. In referring to young Hegney, Mr. Lydecker read a passage from a letter he had written shortly before his death.

In introducing the next speaker, President Mezes gave the record of the O'Connell family in the war. The father, Richard Joseph O'Connell, ex-'77, was on the platform.

O'Connell, Augustus Brown—Graduated from Townsend Harris Hall, January 1911, and from the College, 1915. He is now Captain in the 14th U. S. Infantry, Machine Gun Company, at Spokane, Wash.

O'Connell, Richard Joseph—Graduated from Townsend Harris Hall, June, 1910, and from the College, 1915. He is now Second Lieutenant, Coast Artillery, Officers Reserve Corps, at Ft. Michie, New London, Conn.

O'Connell, Nicholas Brown—Graduated from Townsend Harris Hall, January, 1911, and from the College, 1915. He is now First Lieutenant, 59th U. S. Artillery, Coast Artillery Corps, Battery "F."

O'Connell, Jerome Roland—Graduated from Townsend Harris Hall, June, 1917. He is now a freshman at the College, and belongs to the U. S. Navy Reserve Force, at Newport, R. I. He is on a furlough to continue his studies.

O'Connell, Raymond Harold—He is at present in the upper A Class, Townsend Harris Hall, and is in the U. S. Navy Reserve Force, Newport, R. I. He is on a furlough to continue his studies.

O'Connell, Joseph—The youngest member of the family; and at present registered in Townsend Harris Hall, in the lower C Class.

O'Connell, Miss—At present a student in the Julia Richman High School, and trying to get into the Service.

RAYMOND H. O'CONNELL, TOWNSEND HARRIS HALL

This day commemorates the founding of our College, the greatest institution of its kind in the world. We celebrate this anniversary, not by a gorgeous pageant, but in a sober manner befitting the times, for while we are gathered here, the guns of the armies of autocracy are thundering against the bulwarks of our homes, our lives, and our liberty, that which most of all, is so cherished by us. Our defenders are Americans from the North, the South, the East, and the West. Many are near and dear to us. They are our graduates, our fellow students, and our brothers. They are giving their lives in order to stop the advance of the Huns in their attack upon the very foundations of that Liberty which finds one of its noblest exemplifications in this great College of the People of New York.

Our ancestors fought the war of the Revolution in order that we might gain the freedom which we have enjoyed to this day, and which we are now fighting to preserve from the incursions of an unscrupulous power. It is necessary to give our lives for our ideals and some of us will and gladly too, for students who once studied side by side with us, used the same text books, roamed the same corridors, have made the supreme sacrifice. They died with the glorious light of the martyrs of old on their brows, for the cause which is that of humanity.

Townsend Harris Hall has given up a boy, who, at the first call to arms offered himself in order that we and posterity might still enjoy the peace and security which was handed down to him, by his fathers and ours. Arthur Vincent Hegney, of the Class of 1915, was a young man who, realizing the danger which threatened us, willingly gave up his all. Though life was sweet to him as it is to us, he gave his for Humanity's sake.

Townsend Harris Hall shares the noble pride which this lad's mother feels, for "Alma Mater hath faith in her children," and no one of this great audience will hesitate to follow him for those same ideals. But, this is not the last death to fall so close to us. There will be others and not a few, perhaps, but it is comfort and pride we feel, not despair, as the names of those whom we have loved most are posted on the Roll of Honor. Comfort, because we know that they have not died in vain; pride, because of the gladness, the readiness with which our Youth has responded to the call of the Republic, to the call of Civilization, for the maintenance of those principles of Right and Justice throughout all time.

Arthur Vincent Hegney, we today are trying to show our appreciation of you, but nothing that we can say, nothing that we can do, can ever repay you or your beloved for your noble sacrifice. All that we can do is to follow you and conquer, and conquer we will for God is with the Right.

Irving N. Rattner, President of the Student Council, gave a sketch of the development of this body under the administrations of President Finley and President Mezes, and told of its present war activities. He then stepped from the platform and unveiled the tablet.

PRESIDENT MEZES

By authority of the Board of Trustees, I accept this memorial tablet to Arthur Vincent Hegney, not merely as so much lettering on stone, but rather as a testimonial of appreciation from his Alma Mater of the patriotic devotion of the first one of her sons who offered up his life in the great war for the establishment of liberty and justice throughout the world.

Arthur Vincent Hegney was born in New York City in May, 1899, barely nineteen years ago. After completing his work in the elementary schools, in February, 1912, he entered Townsend Harris Hall, continuing there with some interruptions until June, 1913, and being registered as a member of the Class of 1915. As soon as our country entered the war he enlisted in the 7th Regiment, from which he was transferred in July to the "Fighting 69th" and assigned to the Signal Corps. In due time this regiment was incorporated in the Federal forces as the 165th U. S. Infantry, and in the fall of last year was transported to France. After a further and very intensive training in modern battle tactics, the regiment was assigned to the fighting front in the Toul sector. It was there, in the advanced lines near Lunéville, that young Hegney was killed. A small force, including him, was honored by being assigned the dangerous and delicate task of occupying an advanced post of the front line, which, on March 7th of this year, was totally destroyed by fire from a German mortar and the whole detachment killed. This was a death worthy of the stock from which young Hegney came. His uncle, Patrick Curry, formerly an employe of the College, is now an Ensign in the Naval Auxiliary force. His sister serves the Government in the Ordnance Department at Washington, and a cousin of his enlisted the day of Hegney's death.

This brief story of Hegney's life makes its own strong appeal. It is simple and typical. He lived and died as hundreds of thousands of young Americans have been, and are, ready to live and die.

Of course we cannot wholly repress the note of sadness as we think of him, but it is not the dominant note. It does not lead the harmony of feeling that thought of him awakens. The leading note is the note of pride, pride as Americans and as members of this College at the thought that one of our number simply, almost as a matter of course, but none the less gallantly, offered up his life for a cause greater, it may well prove, than any for which men have died, for the maintenance and development of freedom and justice for all mankind.

And Arthur Hegney exemplifies once again that paradox that seems so hard and yet is so fine and so humanly deep, the paradox that life cannot be gained until it is lost, that no man has really lived unless he has offered up his life for worthy causes. It is not given to all, as it was to him, to make life real through one crowning act of supreme sacrifice. But if that opportunity is not given us, we, too, can win real living by spending our lives day by day and minute by minute in the service of fine and human causes, and, in giving our lives, gain them. That such living is worth while is the word he sends us from Lunéville.

Major Lydecker has read you some cheerful and very human words written by young Hegney shortly before he was killed. I should like to read you some words from one of his comrades in arms, Lieutenant Dinsmore Ely, who also was killed in France, where he was a member of the Aviation Service, on April 21st. A few days before his death he wrote to his father a letter ending thus:

"And I want to say, in closing, if anything should happen to me, let's have no mourning in spirit or in dress. Like a Liberty Bond, it is an investment, not a loss, when a man dies for his country. It is an honor to a family, and is that the time for weeping? I would rather leave my family rich in pleasant memories of my life than numbed in sorrow at my death."

Dr. Ely sent the letter to Mrs. Ely, who was at the family cottage in Donaldson, Wis. There the family held a funeral service for the young soldier, placing his effects in his canoe and covering all with the national colors and sinking it in a quiet nook of the lake, which was the favorite retreat of young Ely.

Ely's words are in Hegney's spirit. They set forth, I am sure, our young hero's feelings with regard to the significance of his own death, and the simple services held over Ely, in fine fidelity to his desires, embody the tribute of feeling that is appropriate for his fellow soldier also.

And now, in conclusion, in order that they may be vivid in your minds, let me read the words on the memorial tablet we have just unveiled:

IN HONOR OF THE FIRST SON OF THE COLLEGE SLAIN IN BATTLE IN THE GREAT WAR

CLASS OF 1915, KILLED IN THE FRENCH TRENCHES

ALMA MATER HATH FAITH IN HER CHILDREN

C. C. N. Y. AND WAR-TIME WASHINGTON

Into every field of human activity and every aspect of our thought the world war has penetrated—to transform accepted values, to deepen insights, and to bring better ways of accomplishing new ends. The new democracy is forging instruments of organization, control, and unity, all of which give promise of releasing in the generality of mankind a larger measure of life than was hitherto believed attainable. The new order is emerging precisely because it is based on a more rational ordering of material and human resources. This appears to be the import of every great message of the President, and every official document and appeal of his aides. The call is insistent for increased production, the elimination of non-essentials, severest economy, and enhanced efficiency. To the war worker moving in the intense atmosphere of war-time Washington, this truth comes home as nowhere else with gripping effectiveness.

The response of the college graduate in the present emergency is hardly credible. One must live and move in Washington these days to realize its extent. In every branch of the service he has found his place, and he is making good. To the war-machine he has brought energy—the impulse to think, and the will to do. One of the most heartening aspects of the situation is the realization that the sneer at the man with college training, the cheap old criticism of the man of the school, is of the irrevocable past.

In the first line of defence, as well as in the mobilization and conservation of the economic and financial resources of the nation, sons of the City College are rendering important service. In line with the alumni of all great institutions of learning in the United States, former City College students are taking a leading part in the culminating crisis of the nation's history. This article is not written in the spirit of boastfulness; no note in these lines would be more out of harmony with the spirit of the times, more out of consonance with the best traditions of Alma Mater. We do feel, however, that in telling briefly of the achievements of but a few City College men we bring to City College our own small measure of devotion, for it has ever been true that those love City College most who serve mankind best.

Mr. Bernard M. Baruch of the Class of 1889, and a Trustee of the College since 1911, is the chairman of the War Industries Board and a member of the Council of National Defence. President Wilson in reorganizing the War Industries Board and appointing Mr. Baruch to his present office aptly described his function to consist in acting "as the general eye of all the supply departments in the field of industry." Mr. Baruch has the duty and the responsibility of formulating the policy of the Board, and only in respect to the fixing of prices of basic commodities does he share his powers with the members of a committee for price determination. The War Industries Board purchases supplies for the allies in this country, although authority to make purchases for the War and Navy Department, as well as for the Emergency Fleet Corporation, is still retained by their own separate purchasing divisions. Mr. Baruch's duties also extend to the matter of priorities; he must determine which industries are essential and basic, and he must direct the allocation of raw materials to those industries. He is serving, therefore, as a sort of central priorities administrator. The Requirements Division of the War Industries Board over which Mr. Baruch exercises authority "anticipates the prospective needs of the several supply departments of the government and their feasible adjustment to the industry of the country as far in advance as possible." Prior to assuming the responsibilities of the chairmanship of the War Industries Board, Mr. Baruch was in charge of the purchasing of all raw materials for the government—in itself a stupendous enterprise for any single administrator.

The chief of the War Industries Board is concerned largely with the speeding up of the production of munitions and other war supplies. To this end his assistants keep in close touch with manufacturers, survey the capacity of plants, report on working conditions, investigate available supplies of men and materials, keep the wheels of industry going generally, so that the present enormous demands of the government may be filled with the least possible friction or delay. This enormous government enterprise is charged with the highest ideals of business efficiency. Under the leadership of a man of Mr. Baruch's experience and ability, the old leisurely ways of the government official have yielded place to the methods of business men determined to achieve the best results in the least time and with the smallest outlay of energy.

Pending Congressional enactment of the Overman Bill which would vest in the President authority to reorganize and co-ordinate emergency executive agencies, President Wilson has formed a "war cabinet" of his own, consisting of the heads of the six new administrative divisions—the Railroad Administration, the Shipping Board, the War Industries Board, the War Trade Board, the Fuel and the Food Administrations. At present this is the only central body which deals with the problems of the unification of war activities. Mr. Baruch, as chairman of the War Industries Board, is a member of the emergency cabinet, which is now holding weekly conferences on vital emergency problems such as shipbuilding, conservation of supplies, transportation, and coal production.

The distinguished builder of the Panama Canal and now the Acting Quartermaster General of the Army, George W. Goethals, was a student at the City College from 1873 to 1876. He left the Twenty-third street building at the beginning of his senior year to enter the United States Military Academy at West Point, from which institution he was graduated in 1880. But he had spent enough time in the halls of the Old Academy for the City College to claim him as her own. The story of his career and of his unparalleled engineering achievement is now part of American history—and it is not necessary here to repeat that tale. General Goethals is as modest as he is famous. One recalls with pleasure his striking presence and the splendid ovation from fellow-alumni at the annual alumni gathering two years ago when he consented to enter the banquet hall, only upon assurance that he would not be called upon as a post-prandial orator.

Shortly after the declaration of war, General Goethals was called into service by President Wilson as head of the Emergency Fleet Corporation. Later he took the post of Chief Adviser of the States of New York and New Jersey in the matter of developing the port of New York. General Goethals was then recalled to active duty by the Secretary of War to succeed Major-General Crozier. As Quartermaster-General he has the enormous responsibility of providing equipment and supplies for the American army, but no one doubts for a moment as to the outcome; everybody knows that if General Goethals has the matter in charge, it will be done.

The principal assistant to the Surgeon-General of the United States Army is Brigadier-General Charles Richard of the class of 1874. He has held every grade in the medical corps of the United States Army, and was raised to his present position in October, 1917.

Upon graduation from City College, General Richard entered the New York University Medical School, and received the degree of M.D. in 1876. He was an interne in the Charity Hospital of Blackwell's Island, New York, from 1876 to 1877, and an assistant physician at the Randall's Island Hospital from 1877 to 1878. In 1879 he entered the United States Army with the rank of First Lieutenant; in 1884 he was advanced to the rank of Captain, in 1897 to Major, 1908 to Lieutenant-Colonel and in 1910 to Colonel of the Medical Corps. He has served at various military posts, making two tours on foreign duty in the Philippine Islands. During the Spanish-American War he was the commanding officer in charge of a hospital train for sick and wounded, and a little later the commanding officer of a general hospital. He has also been the commanding officer of the Walter Reed General Hospital at Takoma Park in the District of Columbia. From 1912 to 1915 he served as a commandant of the United States Army medical school. He became the chief surgeon of the Eastern Department of the Army in 1916. In these years numerous articles have come from his pen on medical military subjects.

General Richard has an abiding love for the College, and his present arduous duties did not prevent him from joining the C. C. N. Y. alumni group in Washington at their annual gathering in April. In the course of a recent conversation he paid his tribute to the former professors at the College who were his teachers, and said to me: "I lay what success I have achieved, and what power I have had to grasp the many complex questions that come up in the administration of this office to the fundamental training I received at the College of the City of New York."

The editor of the Smithsonian, and President of the Washington Branch of the Associate Alumni, Dr. Marcus Benjamin, ex '77, is not directly engaged in war work, but he is still in the scientific service of the United States, where he is respected for his efficiency, admired for his indefatigable scholarly labors, and esteemed for his good fellowship.

Dr. Benjamin holds the degrees of Ph.D., D.Sc., and LL.D., and has been the editor of encyclopedias and magazines, and the author of innumerable articles of a scientific and popular nature. He is the respected leader of the C. C. N. Y. colony in Washington, and every C. C. N. Y. man who reaches the capital these days to engage in war work receives a hearty welcome at his hands. He is an inspiration to the younger men to continue their loyalty to the College which gave them their nurture. The complete story of Dr. Benjamin's career I must reserve for another issue of THE QUARTERLY.

Mr. Albert Strauss, ex '84, is the representative of the Secretary of the Treasury on the War Trade Board and on the Gold Committee of the Federal Reserve Board. Before the war, Mr. Strauss was a banker in New York. He is one of the best informed men in the United States on foreign exchange. It is as an expert in this field that Mr. Strauss is a most valuable member of the War Trade Board. This Board was created last October by an executive order of the President to administer certain sections of the "Espionage Act" and the "Trading with the Enemy Act." The Board regulates and controls the exports and imports of all commodities into the United States, with a view of saving essential commodities for home use, supplying the needs of our allies, conserving tonnage, and distributing available surpluses of exportable commodities among neutral nations so as to fill actual needs and prevent American goods, either directly or indirectly, from crossing the borders of the Central Powers. Thousands of applications for licenses to import or export commodities are examined each day by the War Trade Board through its administrative bureaus—the Bureau of Exports and the Bureau of Imports. How the national regulation of our foreign trade affects the rates of exchange and business conditions the world over are problems of daily concern to Mr. Strauss.

Dr. Sigmund Pollitzer, of the Class of 1879, was recently appointed a Major in the United States Army and was assigned to duty in the office of the Surgeon-General, where he is in charge of skin, venereal and genito-urinary diseases. Dr. Pollitzer received the degree of A.M. from the College of the City of New York in 1882 and the degree of M.D. from the College of Physicians and Surgeons (Columbia) in 1884. He pursued post-graduate studies in Heidelberg, Berlin, Vienna, Hamburg, London and Paris, and was a surgeon in the Servian Army in the Servian-Bulgarian War of 1885–1886. Upon his return he took up the practice of medicine in New York, and was Professor of Dermatology at the New York Post-Graduate Medical School, 1906 to 1915. He is one of the eminent dermatologists in this country, and was honored in 1914 with election to the presidency of the American Dermatology Association. He is also the author of nearly a hundred monographs on subjects related to his specialty. Major Pollitzer's interest in the College has never flagged, and for a good many years he has been serving as a member of the Board of Directors of the Associate Alumni and as a member of its Publication Committee.

Mr. Louis E. Van Norman of the Class of 1891 is the chief of the Division of Information of the War Trade Board—an interesting and skilfully organized publicity organization. This Division gathers information for the use of the War Trade Board, and supplies the connective tissue between that board and the public. Mr. Van Norman deals with the press in matters affecting the Board, and under his direction is issued the Journal of the War Trade Board, which now reaches every important business house in the United States engaged in export or import trade. Mr. Van Norman has had wide experience as a writer for newspapers and magazines and as editor of encyclopedias and foreign reviews. He made an extended tour of Europe and Asia in 1900, and contributed articles to American journals on international politics and economics. He is especially well informed on Russia and Poland, and has written authoritative interpretations of these countries. He has held positions as associate editor of the Chautauquan, foreign editor of the Literary Digest, editor of the Review of Reviews in charge of the foreign department, and editor of The Nation's Business, a monthly magazine dealing with the conduct of the government, published under the direction of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States. Mr. Van Norman's book, Poland, the Knight among the Nations, and his magazine reviews of Polish affairs have won him honorary membership in the Polish Patriotic International Society.

From the academic calm of the Blue Hill Observatory and the chair of meteorology at Harvard University, Professor Alexander George McAdie, of the Class of 1881, eminent climatologist and aerographer, has been called to swift-moving Washington to take charge of aviation operations, as Lieutenant-Commander of the United States Navy. Commander McAdie's impressive physique seems to belie his natural reserve and shyness; in the course of some humorous personal anecdotes he admitted to his City College brethren at one of their recent meetings in the capital, that he had experienced no little difficulty in adjusting himself to his gold-striped brightly-colored naval uniform. In more ways than we can tell the war is working its transformations.

Professor McAdie received the degree of A.M. from the College of the City of New York in 1884, and from Harvard University in 1885. An honorary M.S. was conferred upon him by Santa Clara College. He was a member of the Physical Laboratory of the United States Signal Office from 1886–1887, a fellow in physics and lecturer in meteorology at Clark University, Worcester, Mass., from 1889–1890, official weather forecaster at New Orleans and San Francisco in 1889 and 1890, and professor of meteorology at the United States Weather Bureau from 1903–1913. He has written innumerable papers and a few books on his specialties, among them The Principles of Aerography and The Rainfall of California.

Dr. Bashford Dean, of the Class of 1886, is a major in the Engineering Bureau of the Ordnance Department. From 1886 to 1890 Major Dean taught natural history at the College of the City of New York, and at the same time took post-graduate courses at Columbia University, receiving his Ph.D. in 1890. He has since taught at Columbia University, where he was made a full professor of vertebrate zoölogy in 1904. From 1886 to 1888 he was an assistant to the New York State Fish Commission; in 1890 he was director of the Biological Laboratories at Cold Spring Harbor, and in 1903 became the curator of herpetology and ichthyology at the American Museum of Natural History. He has also organized the collections of arms and armor at the Metropolitan Museum of Art. He is the author of a textbook entitled Fishes, Living and Fossil, and has written numerous scientific papers in paleo-ichthyology and embryology.

Mr. Meyer Bloomfield, of the Class of 1899, is the head of the Industrial Service Department of the Emergency Fleet Corporation, and is responsible for increasing the labor supply three to four times its normal size in an industry the United States neglected for nearly half a century. The shipbuilding program calling for the completion in 1918 of eight times the tonnage delivered in 1916 and the expenditure for this purpose alone of one billion dollars, is said to be the greatest industrial enterprise ever undertaken by any government in the history of the world. The man-power for this Herculean undertaking—an industrial army two hundred thousand strong—has been mobilized, and tens of thousands more will be needed if the shipbuilding job is to be finished in record-breaking time, as is proposed. The enlisting of the skill, the good will, the efficiency and the whole-hearted co-operation of thousands of workers, and the training and organization of forces of new workers—the raw shipbuilding recruits—are the tasks assigned to Mr. Bloomfield, and he brings to his work a vigorous personality, breadth of vision gained as teacher, as social worker and as industrial diplomat, practical good sense and a creative imagination.

Mr. Bloomfield, on his visits to shipyards on the Atlantic as well as the Pacific coasts, assists shipbuilders to organize within each plant a centralized employment and service department which is placed in the hands of a trained employment manager or secretary. This department he regards as basic in the building up and stabilizing of a working force. He arranges conferences of employment executives engaged in shipyard work, to discuss standards of employment, to eliminate wasteful practices and to devise ways of keeping men steadily in the shipyards. To make the work as attractive as possible, and to induce a large force of men to leave less essential jobs in order to help the government, Bloomfield's men are sent out to make conditions in the vicinity of shipyards as attractive and sanitary as possible. Uncle Sam is fast becoming the most liberal social worker in the world. He has undertaken to find homes for thousands of his men, and in emergency cases has erected barracks for their benefit similar to his cantonments. His workers are provided with meals at a huge mess at cost, and their social and recreation needs are carefully provided for. Mr. Bloomfield addresses the laborers, foremen and chiefs on the present shipping situation, removes friction spots, supplies axle grease, and speeds up the work generally.

Mr. Bloomfield is responsible for the creation in this country of the new profession of employment manager. Today an employment manager's organization recruits members from New York to San Francisco, and some of the best members are Mr. Bloomfield's former pupils. By practical demonstration he has been able to convince leaders of industry that the employment chief—the man who pumps life-blood into an industry—is really one of the biggest factors in industrial organization. Next to skill, it is the most important element in production. Up to recent times, the relationship between the management and the men was really a waste product industry. Mr. Bloomfield has shown how to convert this waste into a most precious thing. His discoveries are now helping the government to put through the shipbuilding program.

The Chairman of the new War Labor Policies Board and Assistant to the Secretary of Labor is Mr. Felix Frankfurter of the Class of 1902. Mr. Frankfurter's recent appointment was made under executive order of the President creating a War Labor Administration to exercise "nation-wide control of the labor supply and of questions affecting industrial relations." The official statement of the functions of the War Labor Policies Board reads as follows:

"The Policies Board will determine, directly for war industries and indirectly for non-war industries, all questions involving the distribution of labor, wages, hours, and working conditions and its decisions will be executed by various production departments of the Government, each represented in its membership. This execution will be direct for all industries engaged in war work. The decisions will be given effect in non-war industries through the machinery of the War Industries Board, which controls the flow of raw materials for all industries."

Soon after the outbreak of the war, Mr. Frankfurter was invited by Secretary Baker to become one of his assistants and advisers. During the past year Mr. Frankfurter has served as Secretary and Counsel to the President's Mediation Commission, and has taken part in the investigation of labor difficulties, and in the determination of the merits of very bitter industrial disputes, particularly in the West. I believe that Mr. Frankfurter's report on war-labor conditions will become one of the historic documents of the history of labor in the war. It is illuminated by the flashes from a brilliant mind, and points the way to the new order which is emerging from the stress of the war. A few months ago Mr. Frankfurter went abroad for the United States Government to study the methods of England and France in the marshalling of their labor supply. Before coming to Washington, Mr. Frankfurter was Professor of Law at Harvard University, where he did pioneer work in giving a social setting to the interpretation of the law.

This article is not intended to be a complete chronicle of the service of C. C. N. Y. men to the nation in this crisis. To cover in a comprehensive manner the work of even all the older alumni would be a taxing labor, indeed, and would lengthen this article beyond THE QUARTERLY limits. The editors had in mind merely to give an intimation of this important service. The ground has been broken. The future official Alumni chronicler who attempts to tell the story, in all its detail and wealth of color, of C. C. N. Y.'s participation in the War of 1917 will find that he has undertaken a work of heroic proportions, and he will be courageous indeed who does not falter before reaching the end.

DAVID ROSENSTEIN.

Most of the information was obtained during 1917. We hope that the inaccuracies and the incompleteness of this record will be the means of securing correct information and a more complete roster which will be published next fall.

Your co-operation in supplying any details concerning Alumni or former students will be greatly appreciated; and we urge that complete names, the College class, and details of service be sent to the Associate Historian of the Alumni at the College.

INTRA MUROS

The figures given for this term's registration in the last issue may now be amplified by a statement which will give interesting evidence of the almost startling development the work of the College has attained. The total number of men and women studying under the direction of our authorities has now reached the imposing figure of 11,956. The statistics are as follows:

Academic Department	1,282
College Proper (day)	2,035
Evening Session and Division of Vocational Subjects and Civic Administration	4,439
Extension Courses for Teachers	4,200

Of the 4,439 in the evening session, 1,607 are regular matriculated students, candidates for the liberal degrees; 920 are Government employees training for greater efficiency in the service they render to city, state, or nation. This number is exclusive of the wireless course for the men of the Signal Corps. It is distributed by place of study as follows:

Main College Building	1,805
Commerce Building	1,414
Municipal Building	705
Brooklyn	515

Although, in accordance with President Wilson's expressed desire, the College is energetically pursuing its regular work of training the men who will be needed for the service of the country after the return of peace, yet the special occurrences which we must chronicle this time are nearly all of a warlike nature. On three successive Thursdays in March the Great Hall was the scene of patriotic meetings. On March 7 the principal speaker was Dr. McLain Watt, a member of the British Commission in the United States, who from the beginning of the war saw active service in the Gordon Highlanders. The combination of intense fervor in expressing the grim determination of his countrymen to end forever the outrages whose victims he saw in Belgium and the keen Scotch wit with which he described the lighter side of his experiences made his address fascinating to his hearers.

On the following Thursday, after United States Marshal Thomas McCarthy had told in his blunt Irish way some things that he could tell about the work of rounding up spies and traitors, a very memorable speech was delivered by Rabbi Stephen S. Wise. With a masterly rhetoric, but with a burning conviction more impressive than any technical skill, he exhorted the packed assembly to unswerving loyalty to American ideals and the American cause.

For many years before the war, he said, I happened to be one of that group of Americans who fought and hated militarism. . . . Today I am just as much an anti-militarist as ever I was in July, 1914. And it is just because of that hated militarism that I stand here now urging the fullest prosecution of the war. I say to you, gentlemen, that we are never going back to a sane and decent and ordered life until we have defeated the German Empire in this war. The lesson must be forever upon her memory that no nation can take up arms against civilized humanity and hope to remain unpunished. . . .

The Prussian autocracy has started a forest-fire which is sweeping over the earth; and we, frontier-fashion, are starting a back-fire. The war, like many other articles of questionable quality, was made by Germany. But the peace will be made by America! Before that peace can be made, however, the safety of the world demands that Germany shall be thoroughly beaten. And it is against the insidious whispers of the agitators for a premature, patched-up peace, whispers timid and cowardly today but perhaps stronger and bolder tomorrow, that I wish to speak a word of solemn warning.

On March 21 Dr. Lyman Powell, formerly president of Hobart College, addressed an assembly which had to be held in the Doremus Lecture Theatre, because on every morning of that week the Great Hall was thronged to overflowing with teachers from the elementary schools who came to hear the speakers provided by the Board of Education in a course of patriotic instruction. Dr. Powell said that he brought a message from the college man at the front to the college man at home.

They have seen what may be termed the end of the world—and when I asked one of them whether he would like to be back on Broadway, he answered, "Back to that tame life after this? Not much!" The American boy puts something into the fight which has never been there before. He combines the fierce stubbornness of the British with the glorious enthusiasm of the French. I will tell you a story which illustrates this difference vividly. A Frenchman and an American from a western college were ordered to deliver some ammunition to another sector at a certain time. That meant, of course, that they had to be there if they lived. They were driving their Ford along at a good pace when they reached cross-roads over which German machine-guns maintained a steady fire. Horses and men had been shot down in this deadly stream and blocked the road. In this extreme moment, the Frenchman turned to the American boy and said, "We have been comrades in the fight for democracy, now we shall be comrades in death." To this the American lad replied "Death? Hell! Move those horses and let's get there!"

The Faculty has been enlarged in an unusual way by the creation of a new department, that of Military Science and Tactics, and the appointment as professor of Captain William H. King, D.S.O. He is a graduate of the University of Toronto, and served at the front for more than two years with the 52nd Canadian Infantry. He received his highly prized decoration for exceptional gallantry in action last autumn. On September 4 he was seriously wounded in a trench raid, and after two or three months in hospital was sent back to America, with a leave of absence granted for the express purpose of undertaking this kind of duty. He was one of the principal speakers—the Hon. S. Stanwood Menken, of the National Security League, being the other—at the Liberty Loan rally in the Great Hall on April 11. The special purpose of the meeting was to launch a movement to purchase enough Liberty bonds by contributions from the Faculty and students to serve as an endowment for a scholarship which shall enable some worthy student to pursue post-graduate work. It is desired to raise, with the co-operation of the Alumni if necessary, the sum of $10,000 for this purpose. A similar mass-meeting of the students of the evening session was held on the evening of April 17, under the chairmanship of Professor Linehan. The bonds bought with the subscriptions raised at this meeting are to be turned over to the College library fund.

The raising of money, however, is by no means the only work which the student body has undertaken. A general war service bureau has been organized, Martin Meyer, '18, general chairman. The work is distributed among various committees: (1) publicity; (2) war savings and Liberty bonds; (3) social service and settlement work; (4) soldiers' comfort; (5) farming; (6) Red Cross activities; and (7) miscellaneous.

The College has been proud to know of the good work done by the ambulance bearing its name at the front. Donated by the Alumni of the College to the Metropolitan Unit, it has been serving as "section sanitaire américaine 32." It has been cited before the division for efficient and gallant work, and its driver, Malcolm B. Schloss, '16, has received the Croix de Guerre for distinguished bravery in performing his duty under continuous bombardment.

A contract has been made with the Navy Department by which groups of students who have completed the course in radio-telegraphy at Harvard may come to the College for post-graduate work. Arrangements have been made to secure special equipment for the course. The technical work will be under the direction of Professor Alfred N. Goldsmith.

A year's leave of absence has been granted to Professor Woolston, head of the Political Science Department, in order that he may go to France to serve as a statistical expert with the Red Cross. Mr. Charles B. Austin, a graduate of the University of Indiana, has been appointed to take over Professor Woolston's work in the department till the end of the term. Mr. Austin has been a member of the teaching staff at Wisconsin, Texas, and most recently Columbia.

Professor Downer has been placed in official charge of the teaching of French to the soldiers at Camp Upton. At the annual meeting of the Modern Language Association at New Haven, Professor Downer read a paper on the teaching of French to American soldiers, which has since been reprinted in pamphlet form.

Those who go into the Great Hall nowadays will notice, if they look up towards the ceiling, that the banners of certain German universities which formerly hung in the long row representing ancient and famous seats of learning are now conspicuous by their absence. Protests against their continuance in place reached the Trustees, who, after due deliberation, decided to order their removal. A sad reminder of how far in the past lies the Germany of Goethe and Schiller will come to the thoughts of those who know how these once venerable universities have stained their ancient fame by an unblushing defence and approval of barbarous outrage in the present day.

The College again exemplified its ideal of service to the city at large early in April, when the Community Chorus gave a free public performance of parts of "The Messiah" before an audience which filled every part of the Great Hall. Professor Baldwin was at the organ. The conductor, Harry Barnhart, came from Camp Upton in khaki, and asked the vast audience to sing at the close, "as a prayer for our men in battle," the hymns "Abide with me" and "Nearer, my God, to Thee."

The two most impressive assemblies of these recent days have been the Charter Day exercises, elsewhere described in full, and the mass meeting on "Liberty Day," April 26. This latter occasion was made specially memorable by the presence of representatives of the armies of our gallant allies. Captain Sand of the Belgian army made a charming address in English. Captain Duthoit of the French army—before the war a professor in the University of Lille—thrilled by his fiery eloquence even those who could not understand the beautiful French which he spoke. Sergeant Dobelle sang, also in French, with a fine voice and a dramatic intensity of expression that captivated everybody, two or three soldier songs, including a French version of the familiar "Over There" by Professor Delamarre of the French Department; and when he ended with the Marseillaise, it seemed that almost everybody in the audience knew enough French to join fervently in the chorus.

In the Liberty Loan parade of the same afternoon, the Faculty was restricted to twenty places, though many more desired to take part. The student battalion of over two hundred men completed our contingent, and outranked in attendance and spirit the other colleges participating. As they came swinging by, the Faculty representatives carrying their service flag with twenty-seven stars, and the students with the large flag of close on three hundred stars, preceded by the big lavender and black banner, cheer after cheer arose, showing with what pride the people of the city regard their College.

As an additional indication of the spirit of the student body, it may be worth while to record that at the last meeting of the Student Council, the following resolution was unanimously passed:

That any man who has by any act, expressed or otherwise, indicated that his sentiments are not absolutely and unqualifiedly with those of the nation at this hour, or any man who has not given his support to the activities of the War Service Bureau of C. C. N. Y., be prohibited from holding any representative office, elective or appointive, in student activities.

EXTRA MUROS

ANNUAL REUNION OF THE ASSOCIATE ALUMNI

On April 6 there was a reunion, smoker and patriotic rally of the Associate Alumni at the Hotel Ansonia, about four hundred being in attendance. The war was the main theme, though there was time reserved for the golden anniversary of the Class of '68 and the silver anniversary of the Class of '93. Mr. Bowker spoke for the first and Mr. Louis F. Levy for the second. Dr. Fagnani presided and made the introductory address. He was followed by Trustee Lydecker, '71, Captain Oltarsh, '02, Dean Brownson, Captain King, President Mezes, Professor Robinson, '04, Dr. Timme, '93, Mantinband, '16, and La Chapelle, '14. A letter of greeting from Secretary McAdoo and a telegram from Major Frankfurter, '02, were read. The occasion was memorable for the enthusiasm of the audience and for the excellence of the speeches.

WASHINGTON BRANCH

A week later, April 13, the Washington Branch held its annual dinner at the Cosmos Club. Dr. Marcus Benjamin, ex-'77, presided over the thirty who gathered at table, and addresses were made by Captain Oltarsh, '02, Lewis S. Burchard, '77, General Richards, '74, Lieutenant Fromont of the French Army, Colonel Church, Princeton '88, Captain Aiken, ex-'62, Meyer Bloomfield, '99, and Jacques de La Chapelle, '14. Good fellowship was a notable feature of this gathering.

THE CITY COLLEGE CLUB

With the advent of our country's entrance into the world war, the City College Club has dedicated all its meetings, with one exception, to questions of nationalism and patriotism. The one exception was the meeting of May 29, 1917, when a reception was tendered to Dr. Benjamin M. Briggs, '61, on the occasion of his seventy-fifth birthday. The members paid a fitting tribute to Dr. Briggs, who is one of the founders of the club and who has been one of its staunchest supporters for the past twenty-five years. Congratulatory remarks were made by Joseph S. Wood, '61, Edward Lauterbach, '64, Dr. Alfred Michaelis, '94, Julius Hyman, '94, Dr. Gabriel R. Mason, '03, and Dr. Joseph J. Klein, '06. Dr. Briggs was presented with a large portrait of himself, which he in turn presented to the club.

At the October meeting of the club, soldiers' and sailors' welfare work was considered. In view of the fact that many of the members had joined or were about to join the colors, it was decided to establish service relationship with members in the national service. Regular correspondence pairs were appointed, and an appropriation was voted to supply tobacco for the period of the war to men abroad and in cantonments.

In March, 1918, a patriotic rally was held. Julius Hyman, '94, delivered an address on "Americanism." Everett P. Wheeler, '56, Dr. Benjamin M. Briggs, '61, William J. Campbell, '78, and Edward B. Levy, '04, supplemented the formal address with a series of speeches on "Patriotism."

Officers elected for the current year are: Everett P. Wheeler, '56, Honorary President; Dr. Benjamin M. Briggs, '61, President; Joseph L. Buttenwieser, '83, First Vice-President; Bernard Naumberg, '94, Second Vice-President; Jacob Holman, '04, Secretary; Dr. Joseph J. Klein, '06, Treasurer; Dr. Alfred Michaelis, '94, Historian. Members of the Board of Managers for 1918–1920 were elected as follows: Joseph S. Wood, '61; William J. Campbell, '78; Robert C. Birkhahn, '01; Dr. Gabriel R. Mason, '03; Edward B. Levy, '04. Robert B. Brodie, '03, and George S. Kurke, '10, were elected to fill vacancies in the Board of Managers for the year 1918–1919.

JACOB HOLMAN,
Secretary.

PHI BETA KAPPA

The annual meeting of the Gamma Chapter was held at the Hotel Astor on the evening of Tuesday, February 26, President Werner in the chair. After routine business, Professor David B. Steinman, '06, read a paper on "Bridge Building, Ancient and Modern."

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, Adolph Werner, '57; Vice-President, Lewis F. Mott, '83; Treasurer, Donald G. Whiteside, '97; Recording Secretary, George B. De Luca, '09; Corresponding Secretary, Alfred D. Compton, '97.

The following members were elected to the Chapter: From the Class of June, 1917: William G. F. Price. From the Class of February, 1918: William Jaffe, Jerome I. Udell, Alexander Lipinsky, Jacob Feld, Philip Adler, Bennett D. Studley, Philip Franklin, Joseph J. Berkowitz, Leo A. Rubin, Harold C. Emerson, Mordecai Konowitz.

PRESIDENT MEZES

It is now known that President Mezes is engaged in gathering and tabulating information which will be required by the American Delegates to the Peace Conference at the end of the war. The subjoined quotation is from the New York Evening Post of April 17:

> The Executive Committee is headed by Dr. Mezes, president of the College of the City of New York, and brother-in-law of Colonel House, as director, with Walter Lippman, formerly one of the editors of the New Republic, and writer on international topics, as secretary. Colonel House is particularly fortunate in having Dr. Mezes available as his right-hand man. Besides being a scholar of great attainments and wide range of learning, especially in history, economics, and international relations, Dr. Mezes has the peculiar distinction of standing toward Colonel House in precisely the same relation which Colonel House occupies with the President. In other words, his mind works along the same lines. He sees things in the same perspective. Colonel House can ask him to do something, and to be sure that in Dr. Mezes's hands the work will have the same treatment as he would give it himself. When Colonel House went to Europe the last time he was able to leave the supervision of the newly created inquiry in charge of his brother-in-law, without worrying over the possible mistakes in policy or distortion of his intentions. He could have placed such confidence in no other individual.
